Barre got the overflow today.

Montpelier's prayer was answered today.

The granite plants of the city seem to be a mark for the fire fiend.

The work of the local fire department in subduing the fire of last night showed up to good advantage.

Mayor Frank Corry has shown himself to be a man of considerable firmness. For references enquire of the saloon-keepers in his city.

When the states begin to bar life insurance companies from doing business within their confines it is time for the companies to sit up and take notice of things. Apparently housecleaning is not one of the domestic qualities of these concerns.

MR. DeBOER'S CENTENNIAL AD-DRESS.

"A Vermonter is always a Vermonter," declared Joseph A. DeBoer in his address at the Montpelier Centennial celebration this forenoon, and therein he gave expression to the dominating note of his address—the spirit of patriotism, a veneration for the past and a calm confidence in the future of this little commonwealth nestled among the green hills. Throughout his admirable effort Mr. DeBoer has scattered the note of loyalty, not of a native son, but of an adopted son who has grasped the spirit with all the fervor and strength of the former. The conclusion to his address breathes that spirit in the following words: "Vermont is better today than ever, better traveled, better heated, better lighted, better fed, better transported, better served with news, and has a better market in which to trade and to which to sell." As conveying such a note and as an epitome of events clustering about the early records of the state and particularly relating to the choice of Montpelier as the capital of the state, the address makes a notable contribution to Vermont historical papers. It has, of course, particular reference to Montpelier's struggle to become the capital of the state, telling how the little band of citizens, "poor but honest," contributed of their substance in liberal measure for the construction of the $9,000 structure which was the state government's first home in Montpelier, how that building was "whittled out of existence" and replaced in 1836, how the second building, destroyed by fire in 1857, was superseded by the present State House which has been added to as the growth of the government departments required. All this, much of which Montpelier did at a great sacrifice, has been graphically told by Mr. DeBoer. In connection with it, it is interesting to note the part which Barre, Montpelier's neighbor, played in the original movement which brought the coveted honor to Montpelier. It was James Fiske of Barre who in October, one hundred and two years ago, first

NORTHFIELD.

J. F. Cunliffe of Barre spent Sunday at his home in town.

The little child of Mr. and Mrs. William Sears is very ill with appendicitis.

Mrs. Andrew Dunham of New York is visiting at the home of George Dunham's for a couple of weeks.

The two small children of Mr. and Mrs. Felix McCarty on East street, are seriously ill with diphtheria.

Mrs. Belle Houston has reopened her millinery parlors on Union street and will hold her opening on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week.

James Clegg, who has been spending the summer in Frankfort, Me, returned on Saturday and will go to work in the stone sheds of E. R. Ellis & Co.

The Rev. Mr. Sargent, formerly pastor of the Congregational church of Lisbon, N. H., preached his first sermon at the Congregational church last Sunday.

Joseph Arney, who was seriously injured on Tuesday last, being kicked by a horse, is reported as some better but still in a very dangerous condition.

Mrs. Mattie Fuller and Miss Kate Johnson, who have been spending the summer in Nova Scotia with Mr. Fuller, returned home on Friday for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Booth returned on Saturday evening from Hartford, Conn., where they have been visiting Mr. Booth's parents, for the past two weeks.

Miss Jeanette Giffin and Edward Freeman of Hartford, Conn., arrived in town on Monday and will remain here until after the Centennial celebration. They are stopping at Mrs. Emma Giffin's.

The brick work on the Brown library was started today. The other work is progressing very rapidly, the foundation being all laid. A large force of men will be put to work so that the brick work will be completed by the middle of November.

A number of young people of the Universalist church met with Miss Lina La Morder at the home of Mrs. H. E. Reed Friday night and games of various kinds were indulged in until a late hour. Ice cream and cake were the refreshments and all enjoyed a pleasant evening.

Arthur Smith, the Norwich coach, was called to Worcester, Mass., his home, after the Dartmouth game on Wednesday and was unable to return until Monday night. The next game played by the Norwich team will be next Saturday with the post team at Fort Ethan Allen.

George Cummings, who has been conducting a hack and trucking business in this village for nearly a year, sold his trucking business to Mr. Shepard about three weeks ago. Today he closed a deal with Ernest W. Dowling for the hack business. He received for the two about $500. The people of the village are sorry to lose Mr. Cummings who has always been very accommodating and given the best of service to the public. He will remain in town during the remainder of the week and will then go to Hardwick, his home.

WOODRUFF CANNOT SERVE.

Business Interests Prevent His Becoming Candidate for Mayor.

Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 4.—Former Lieut. Governor Timothy L. Woodruff reached here last night from his Adirondack camp. In an interview he said business interests make it impossible to accede to requests of leaders that he head the New York Republican majority ticket.

"I will say again," said Mr. Woodruff, "what I recently said in New York, that purely business reasons prevent me from thinking of making the canvass for mayor this year, much as I would like to. I have taken a house in Syracuse, as you know, for the winter and am head over heels in business. I am simply tied up so that it would be impossible for me to head the ticket this year. I appreciate the honor in being suggested for the responsible office of mayor of New York, and am compelled to refuse for no other reason than that which I have stated."

moved for the selection of a committee to establish a permanent legislative seat. It was not, however, until two years later, November 6, 1805, that a bill was passed by the legislature choosing Montpelier as that place—a location, which, to the state's founders, typified neutrality, a half way point between the old-time "enemies" on the east and on the west side, as William C. Bradley said, "not bowing themselves to the Adirondacks across the Lake nor to the White Hills from St. Johnsbury, but to this mountain, the Green Mountain range; and I am for going down to no Jerusalem on the east or the west."

JINGLES AND JESTS.

Wanted His Money's Worth.

An Albany woman the other day took her small grandson to services. As they approached the poor box the grandmother handed the boy a dime with directions to drop it in the slot. "What for?" asked the inquisitive child.

"Put it in," reiterated the woman, "it will buy a loaf of bread."
After stopping a moment for a silent prayer, she said: "Come on, George."
"No, grandma," promptly replied the boy, "we must wait for our bread."
Albany Journal.

It Was a Success.
Last Wednesday there was an excursion from Rayville to Keokuk, Ia. There were four of the Rayville boys went. We came to a large railroad bridge across the river at Keokuk Part of that bridge had to turn around to let the boat pass through. The boat landed after it passed the bridge. By the time the boat put us on shore it was 4 o'clock and only had an hour to stay in town. The crowd went up in town to see such a large city. The population of Keokuk was only 15,000. Street cars there as we never saw before. The hour passed away soon and never got to see half the town on account of the steamer leaving at 5 o'clock, and then the mate had to go up in town and hurry some of them up then part of them may have got left. On the steamer there was beer and most anything you would want. Music and waltzing to who laid the chunk. As the boat was on its way back there were several fights between the mate and the passengers. Two of the passengers got put down in the hull (as we call it). One fellow got a beer bottle landed up against the side of his head. When we got off the train here most every one thought we were drunk; they said, because we looked so bad, which we certainly did feel tuff. But all the crowd reports a fine time.—Rayville (Mo.) The Habit of Swearing.

Happily the gentleman who habitually punctuates his conversation with oaths is less in evidence than in times past. The very fact that many persons will regard it as a contradiction in terms to say that any gentleman swears, emphasizes this statement. But if one gets away from a touch of Pharisaism or does not involve himself in the hopeless task of trying accuracy to define a "gentleman" it will be admitted that some gentlemen do swear a little.

And that brings one back to the first proposition that the habit is being eradicated among the class of men who command respect, and that although the use of oaths in general intercourse still exists in Kansas City, as elsewhere, it is becoming less common.

Such a crusade against profanity as that heralded from New Jersey ought to be a good thing, in any community. Public opinion is against swearing. It is no longer a crank who dislikes to hear oaths. In England it used to be quite the thing for lords and ladies to swear. "Excuse me, my lady," said an Earl who had sworn at his partner in a whist: "I thought I was playing with my wife." Long before that eighteenth century episode the French called all Englishmen "Goddams," deriving the term from what the Century Dictionary calls "the characteristic national oath of the Englishmen."

Now it is rare, at least, to find "a gentleman who will swear in the presence of ladies." Aside from the religious inhibition, the practice in any company is recognized as jay and coarse. A movement which would carry the reform into all use of language should be welcome for its improvement of manners.—Kansas City Times.

DRINK
Bars Men from Employment

Every line of business is beginning to shut its doors absolutely to drinking men. Business competition has become keen that only men of steadfast habits can find employment.

Employers do not want men that are addicted to drink. A drinking man is not in fit condition to handle responsible work. Continual drinking diseases the nerve system. No "will power" can cure; treatment is necessary.
